Learning at Home

A new series this school year for families of students with disabilities

We know that you might be juggling work, your own schedule, and having your children home more than before. Or, you might have sitters, family members, or siblings looking after your children. Join us this school year as we meet online monthly to discuss topics related to at-home learning and “management” specific to children with disabilities. We have some topics ready-to-go for you, and we will also take requests for monthly topics.

Details about our 1st Learning at Home online meeting are below. The meeting will be recorded for you to view at any time, but your live presence and active participation will allow you to discuss with others and get feedback on your questions.

Meeting: Thursday, September 17th at noon

Topic: Schedules and Routines

During this first meeting, we will discuss the importance of setting up consistent routines at home. We will provide at-home schedule templates and other resources for helping your children keep track of their school work and become more independent in their daily routines. There will be opportunities for questions and discussion.
